Parliamentary Practice.
 Mayor Groneweg and City Engineer Tostevin do not use the same text book on parliamentary rules. Near the close of the last council meeting the city engineer entered upon a talk, which the mayor tried to punctuate with a period—a full stop. Mayor Groneweg innocently asked him (the engineer) was elected by the people, and it was his right and duty to impart to the council such information in his department as he deemed important. He proposed to go ahead discharging his duty by continuing his speech. The mayor called him to order, and he declined to come to order. There was no marshal in the room to enforce the call to order and the speech went on to a finish. The question as to whether the mayor can limit the time for the city engineer's speech-making is still an open one.

CRUSHED BY THE WHEELS.

The Mysterious Death of J. B. Irwin, a Stranger Here.

A LITTLE CHILD DROWNED.

Three Iowa Lads With An Ambition To Be Cow Boys Get Jailed—The Government Building To Be Ready For Use Before Fall.

A Stranger Strangely Killed.
 At an early hour yesterday morning the mangled body of a man was found lying near the Broadway crossing of the Northwestern railway. He had evidently been struck by some passing train or engine, and after being dragged for some distance had been tossed to one side. His body had been cut in two, and the remains were in a horrible condition.

Coroner Paul was summoned and an inquest was held, but it resulted in throwing but little light upon the details of the man's death. From papers found on his person it appears that his name was J. B. Irwin, and that his business was that of selling patent rights. There were several letters, from which it appears that he had lived for some years in Plum Hollow, in Fremont county. He appeared to be thirty or more years of age, dark complexioned, and was ordinarily dressed. A few dollars in money were found on his person. The coroner sent telegrams to Thomas Gray, who appears to be a cousin, and to Henry Webb, of Madison, Neb., who seems from letters to be also a relative.

The railway men know nothing of the occurrence until the discovery of the body by Conrad Raser, which was about daylight. Inquiry about the city gave no light as to the probabilities even of how the man came to be there. Some recognized the man as one they had seen here, but beyond that little could be learned.

Anxious To Be Cow Boys.
 The police about 3 o'clock yesterday morning found three young fellows, aged about nineteen, roaming the streets, and arrested them on suspicion. They gave their names as Fred Crouse, Otto Brown and Henry Hill. Two of them had revolvers and the other a knife. On being brought into court yesterday morning they explained that they were country boys, who had a great burning desire to go west and become cow boys. They met at Missouri Valley, and together came here intending to go west and grow up with wide brimmed hats on their heads, and revolvers on their sides, and Indian ponies between their legs. They meant no harm, and were sorry for it. Judge Aylesworth asked them if they had been to school. Yes, they had. "Have you ever read very much?" "Yes, I've read a good deal. I've read every one of the dime novels up to No. 372. I have one just started on No. 373." After thus getting at the fountain source of inspiration which had led the lads to seek for life on the plains, he gave them a little of his helpful advice. The boys begged to be let off. They were willing to give up the notion of going west, and would look about and get some work in Council Bluffs. "No," remonstrated the judge, you wouldn't be of any account here. So one would want you. You have aimed high. You want to roam over the plains as gay and festive cowboys. You are so eager for such a life that you could not wait to get out there before buying your revolvers, and I suppose if you could have got your broad hats and Indian ponies in Missouri Valley you'd have supplied yourselves with them also before you started. The best thing for you to do is to go right on and get there as soon as possible. You won't be worth much until you have tried it. You had better get there, and commence working back home from that end. It's the quickest way home for you. You'll not be satisfied until you try it. A few days in the saddle will show you a big difference between fiction and friction. No, don't stop here to form any good resolutions, or turn back. Keep right on until you see all there you want to of a broad-brim hat, a revolver and a pony, and then you can tune your voices to sing "Home Sweet Home" with some feeling."

A Child Drowned.
 Yesterday morning a sad and sudden affliction fell upon the family of S. Anderson, a well known Danish farmer living in Hazel Dell. His little child, aged about two years, wandered from the house, and searched being made he was at last found about a mile and a half from the house, drowned in a little creek into which he had fallen. The sorrow stricken father was in the city yesterday afternoon, getting a casket, in which to place the little form so suddenly bereft of life. It was pitiful to see the strong man so bowed down with the heavy weight of sorrow so suddenly put upon him.

Drs. Hanchett and Smith.
 Sarah A. Smith, M. D., a cousin of Mrs. Dr. Hanchett, has just returned from Chicago, where she has spent several years in Hahnemann college and hospital, and from which she recently graduated. The Bee is much pleased to learn from Dr. Hanchett that Dr. Smith and himself have formed a partnership, with offices in Dr. Hanchett's old rooms, which, by the way, have been fitted up recently, making them the most convenient, complete and beautiful suite of offices occupied by any physician in the city. One of the greatest needs of Council Bluffs has long been a first class lady physician, one who could win and hold the confidence and esteem of the public, by a thorough education, and by the possession of those womanly instincts so rare in the female doctor, and yet so necessary to her success. In Dr. Smith all these conditions are met, and they insure for her here a brilliant and successful future. She is by no means a stranger here, but the circle of friends will rapidly widen, now that she takes up her permanent residence.

Forced to Reform.
 A hearty country boy named Walker, whose home is in Rockford township, was yesterday taken to the reform school on the request of his father, who says he cannot manage the boy any longer. The boy has caused his folks much trouble by running away from home and not staying run, and when at home by helping himself to property belonging to neighbors. As a last resort his father urged the reform school. Judge Aylesworth issued the necessary papers yesterday, and the boy was turned over to the sheriff. Perhaps if he had been turned over earlier, and in a different way, it might have been better for him and saved him from the present trouble.

But He Got There.
 Detroit Free Press: A city hall official was standing on the Woodward avenue steps of that structure yesterday when a man who had his hands on his stomach came up and said: "Beg pardon, but you have the look of a physician—an eminent physician." "Oh, I'm no doctor," was the reply. "Sorry for that, but perhaps you can give me some information. What are the symptoms of poisoning?" "Have you been poisoned?" "No." "Do you have spasmodic pains?" "Not yet." "Feel shivery, with a great thirst and heat?" "No, nothing like that; I feel a complete goneness for about a foot up and down here, and every time I think of ham and eggs my mouth waters." "Why, it may be hunger." "I shouldn't a bit wonder if it was, being I haven't eaten anything for thirty-six hours." The official uttered a "Humph!" looked the man over three or four times, and handed him twenty cents and said: "Better get some new scheme, it takes too long to come to the point in this."
